Deserted Farm

by Mark Vinz

Where the barn stood the empty milking stalls rise up like the skeleton of an ancient sea beast, exiled forever on shores of a prairie.
Decaying timber moans softly in twilight the house collapses like a broken prayer.
Tomorrow the heavy lilac blossoms will open, higher than the roof beams, reeling in wind.